Lindsey Bakker recently assumed the position of MAC finance and accounting director, and will replace Controller Heather Bulloch, who is moving to Bend this summer with her husband, Scott, daughter, Belle, and son, Will. Bakker graduated from Gonzaga University with a bachelor's degree in business administration, and remains a huge fan of the Bulldogs, even while living among Beavers and Ducks. She's a licensed and practicing CPA who began working for KPMG after graduation. After leaving the firm as manager of audit, Bakker joined TEC Equipment as corporate controller. While she's enjoying working with Bulloch during the transition at MAC, she's also looking forward to assuming the mantle of leadership for the Business Office. Bakker finds joy in running, golfing and playing with her daughter, Brinley. When she gets an extended break from work, she likes to spend it vacationing in Hawaii or relaxing at home. Unless, that is, it's Christmas break, in which case it's time for her annual viewing of National Lampoon's Christmas Vacation.

What does new MAC Lifeguard Coordinator Alex Johnson do in his free time? Swim even more, of course. When he was 3 or 4 years old, Johnson's dad threw him in the deep end of a pool, and instead of spending years in therapy, he decided to own the water. After swimming in high school and pursuing it for three more years at Southern Methodist University, he's still going strong. Johnson started at MAC in late 2015, and after working as a lifeguard and swim instructor, he made the leap to coordinator in March. "Now I see the other side ... how to help lifeguards be good at their jobs," he says. "I'm also feeling like I have more of a say in day-to-day operations." At the end of the day, he heads to his other job, as a swim coach at the Portland Aquatic Club. "I'm uncoordinated on land," he explains, "but in the water, I'm graceful."

Winged M Set to Soar Under New Leadership

The swifts return but once a year to circle the chimney at Chapman Elementary, but MAC members can look forward to seeing The Winged M alight on their mailboxes with much greater frequency. If the comforting consistency of the club's publication seems almost too perfect, please enjoy the leadership changes taking place behind the scenes!

In March, Kelly Robb joined the MarCom team as Marketing Manager, bringing with her seven years of experience working as a marketing and account manager, and digital advertising producer, for The Oregonian/OregonLive.

"I've always been drawn to the MAC for its exclusive community, and now I'm here!" Robb says. "I'm ready to make an impact and thrilled to meet all of the people that make the MAC amazing. I'm going to pour all of my savvy, marketing know-how, and local connections into continuing to position the club as a place and lifestyle people desire."

Part of her job is to fill the role vacated by former Ad Sales Rep Lisa House in December, and ably maintained by MarCom Coordinator Callie

Jacobs in the interim. She also looks forward to significantly expanding the magazine's marketing opportunities into new realms of digital experience.

Meanwhile, on the editorial side, The Winged M welcomes its first new managing editor in seven years. With Tony Roberts making the jump to the Multnomah Athletic Foundation, the magazine has a new fearless leader in the form of Allyson Wilinski. Most recently working as a copywriter and editor for Nike Global Sales, Wilinski spent the previous decade as editorial manager of member publications for California public broadcaster KQED. That included piloting the station's monthly member magazine, On Q.

"While I'm not offering to give up my phone or computer, I hold a special place in my heart for print publications," Wilinski says. "The Winged M is an amazing resource for the MAC community, and I am super excited to help make it even better – from behind-the-scenes process improvements, to telling more stories about the people who make the club such a special place."
